

The Center for Instructional Excellence presents
A Faculty Club Luncheon

Teaching for Inclusion

Featuring:

A. T. Miller

Coordinator, Multicultural Teaching and Learning
Center for Research on Learning and Teaching
University of Michigan

College is the first place many students encounter such diverse groups of people—and the university can provide a rich opportunity to explore, react, and evaluate beliefs and opinions. Faculty might reflect on what messages they and their students have learned about “minorities” and gender/race/ethnicity... We might ask, “How do student and faculty perceptions of others obstruct or frame our diverse experiences, intentions, and understandings? How do these backgrounds and beliefs affect experiences and learning in the classroom?”

A. T. Miller has written widely on multiculturalism and regularly consults on classroom climate, curriculum, course design, inclusive pedagogy and recruitment and retention of students and faculty of color. He will offer some observations on inclusive teaching practices and issues diversity in the college classroom. An open dialogue will follow Miller’s remarks.

A $5 buffet lunch will be available for reservations made by Thursday, October 31.
