

The Center for Instructional Excellence
Faculty Club Luncheon presents

Multiculturalism and Student Learning: Implications for Teaching and Assessment

Victor M. H. Borden, Ph.D.

University Planning, Institutional Research & Accountability (IU)
Associate Professor of Psychology (IUPUI)

Cultural backgrounds, practices, and knowledge inform who we are and what we bring to the classroom—as students and instructors. These are not solely political issues or questions of sociability and tolerance. They construct, constrain, and provide opportunities for teaching and learning, for pedagogy and assessment.

Purdue University Calumet serves a richly diverse community, providing a bounty of experiences and examples for coursework as well as carrying difficult and controversial issues that can disrupt or complicate the learning environment. This luncheon opens a dialogue on some of the implications of these conditions.

Please join us for a conversation on the possibilities for practices which address these issues.
